THE SANJAK OF HERZEGOVINA IN 17TH CENTURY: WAQF HERITAGE¹

Abstract: This paper addresses the issue of construction of waqf buildings in the Sanjak of Herzegovina during the 17th century. On the basis of archival material found in various archives in Sarajevo, Mostar, Dubrovnik, Istanbul and several monastic archives in Dalmatia, information on sacral and profane objects, their names, date of establishment and the names of the founders was provided. The paper equally follows the establishment of endowments, regardless of confessional affiliation.

Keywords: The Eyalet of Bosnia, The Sanjak of Herzegovina, waqf, buildings, 17th century, muslims, non-muslims

Apstrakt: Ovaj rad tertira pitanje izgradnje vakufskih objekata u Hercegovačkom sandžaku 17. stoljeća. Na temelju izvora koji se nalaze u arhivima u Sarajevu, Mostaru, Dubrovniku, Istanbulu i nekoliko dalmatinskih samostana, donose se podaci o sakralnim i profanim objektima, njihovim nazivima, vremenu nastanka i zakladnicima/vakifima. Rad sadrži podatke o zadužbinama bez obzira na njihov konfesionalni karakter.

¹ This paper is the result of a doctoral research and a part of it was presented at the 2nd International Archive Congress on Ottoman Lands held 20-24 November 2017 in Istanbul (Turkey). This paper also contains new information that we have found in the meantime in the archival sources. In the meanwhile, the paper was published in Turkish language in the following place: "XVII. Yüzyılda Hersek Sancağı: Vakıf Eserleri", 2nd International Archive Congress on Ottoman Lands, Bildiri kitabı, Cilt I, T. C. General Information

The Sanjak of Herzegovina was formed in year 1470 and was a part of the Bosnian Eyalet since year 1580. Before that, it was a part of the Rumeli Eyalet. Between the period of 1470 and 1576, its capital was in Foča, and between 1576 and 1833 its capital was in Tašlidža (Pljevlja). Between 1833 and 1851 the Sanjak od Herzegovina moved up to Eyalet status, and between 1851 and 1878 was again a part of the Bosnian Eyalet/Vilayet. Only between 1875 and 1877, during rebellion, it was once again turned into an Eyalet/Pashaluk.

In 17th century the Sanjak of Herzegovina was consisting of 16 kazas. On the east, it was bordering Montenegro and the Ishkodra Sanjak, on the southwest Dubrovnik and the Klis Sanjak, and on the north the Bosnian Sanjak. In 17th century, compared to the more central areas of Ottoman Empire, the Sanjak of Herzegovina was a border and the far end of the Empire, but nonetheless it was a strategic stronghold in Adriatic standing against outsider threats (Venetian Republic, The Papal States, The Habsburg Monarchy).²

Waqf Establishments

In the Ottoman Empire, waqf establishments were ‘founding and universal’ institutions during development of cities and villages.³ Throughout the 17th century waqf was one of the core symbols of Herzegovina society. Similar to centuries before, waqfs managed to keep their importance. The diversity of waqfs is easily visible in every part of the cities in Herzegovina. As a very important part of Islamic heritage, waqf establishment is easily researched through waqf buildings and vakufnames.

Educational Institutions

Mektebs⁸ (Elementary Schools)

Mektebs are traditionally built next to mosques and madrasahs. Very popular among people, they are also mentioned in traditional songs. For instance, mektebs in Mostar are described as following: ‘It’s the pure mekteb, three hundred girls are being taught, the teacher is Omer Efendi, headworker beautiful Eminā’. In the Sanjak of Herzegovina, throughout 17th century there were 14 mektebs built in 8 different locations, 8 of them being in Mostar.

Bridges¹¹

The importance of bridges is high in places with a lot of rivers and springs, such as Herzegovinian Sanjak. Therefore, there was always a need for bridges in the area. According to our research, in 17th century 5 new bridges were built in 4 different locations.

Clock Towers¹³

It is accepted that European 14th century clock tower tradition transferred to the Ottoman Empire in 16th century. It is used as a symbol which gives a city nice decoration and is seen from all directions. In Ottoman Bosnia, there were 23 clock towers. 6 of them were built in 17th century Herzegovinan Sanjak in 5 different locations.

Other Waqf establishments

In addition to discussed waqf establishments, there were other types of waqf present. For instance, in Stolac place named Tepica Pazar – made on 4 cornerstones was frequent visiting place for traders. Five-eyed/quarry mill, column for rolling cloth, mold for wool collection, cistern and fountains, passenger water cans (fucci), various dishes for imaret, land for the poor etc. was also given to waqf by Herzegovina residents.¹⁴

Christian Waqfs

Catholics

Propaganda, consciously and systematically was first used by Roman Catholic Church via missionaries sent to non-Catholic countries for expanding Christianity. In this manner, in 1662 Catholic Church built

Catholic Church kept their presence in the Sanjak of Herzegovina in two regions, Makarska (1615 rebuilt) and Trebinje-Mrkanj. They also had Franciscans in the region.¹⁶

In Dalmatia, a part of the Sanjak of Herzegovina, throughout Makarska, Zaostrog and Imotski Franciscan monasteries could be found alongside different churches in the villages nearby.

In this part of our work, we'll name Catholic churches built during 17th century period¹⁷:

Orthodox

Since medieval ages, Orthodox Church was present in Hum/Herzegovina region. They built monasteries and churches at first. The name of the episcopal changed during times: Hum, Herzegovina, Zahum, Herzegovina-Hum, Trebinje. In the 17th century, two were used: Trebinje and Milešev.

Orthodox were continuing to spread in this century as well; this was backed by built monasteries and churches¹⁸:

Instead of a conclusion

The idea of waqf, a crucial part of Islamic heritage representing goodness, played a big role in urbanization of the Eyalet of Bosnia. It was a massive element of social, economic and cultural affairs. In this article, we are discussing 17th century Herzegovina heritage (part of the Eyalet of Bosnia; bordering Montenegro and the Sanjak of Shkodra on east; Dubrovnik and the Sanjak of Klis on southwest; the Sanjak of Bosnia on north) including masjids, mosques, teques, mektebs (elementary schools), madrasahs, hammams, bridges, khans, caravanserais, cafes and similar. In the Sanjak of Herzegovina; from 1606 to 1699; 56 mosques, 16 masjids, 3 to 6 teques, minimum 14 maximum 20 mektebs, minimum 17 maximum 22 madrasahs, 9 hammams, 5 bridges, 6 khans, 4 caravanserais, 6 clock towers and 3 water ways were built. Some of the numbers are not final, as the information is not as clear in scripts. Furthermore, in the same location, waqfs belonging to Orthodox and Catholic are also mentioned. In 17th century, 8 Orthodox and 11 Catholics waqf buildings were built.

If we look at some of the specifics of the buildings being constructed in the 17th century and comparing it to the 15th and 16th century, it can be said that there were no more monumental and glorifying establishment being built. It's a natural process not implying a declining period. For example, if a place had a big sultan's mosque, it wasn't in Ottoman customs to build another one. Due to the lack of security and consistency in the border of Sanjak, we can see only modest establishments being built. It was a region of constant battles throughout 17th century. So, for example, in Trebinje, people would not focus on building monumental establishments, but rather modest and basic ones. Another characteristic is that Herzegovina has very limited number of turbe (tomb).

The history of establishments given to waqf is another problem we've faced throughout our research. A lot of historical traces and vakufnames were lost and for some of the establishments it was hard figuring out the information. Thus, we've opted for terminus post quem and terminus ante quem methodology (the earliest possible or the latest possible date of occurrence).
